The Census of 1865.—Some of the States have wisely adopted the policy of having a census taken under State author ty at intervals of ten years, and they have selected the years half way between those upon which the United States census is taken. This gives them the benefit of an enumeration every five years. The plan has mapy advantages, and ought to be adopted in all the States; and it would have been especially valuable if such enumerations had been taken in 1866, as statisticians would then have been enabled to see to what extent normalising was allowed. see to what extent population was affected by the war. MOB LAW AT DANVILLE,

While the humane provision of our State Constitution, which allows the Executive to step in between the law's victim and its vengcanee, was inspired by the estruction by fire, on Sunday morning kindliest nature and framed in the perfeet wisdom of its constructors, yet it must e acknowledged that clemency, like its opposite, may be carried to extremes. While others have been assaulting our worthy Governor for the extraordinary frequency and the astonishing rapidity with which he has been granting pardons of late we have remained silent. We knew his heart too well. If ever there was a heart that felt another's woes it beats in his bosem. Upon his car the tale of suffering does not fall unheeded. We honor him for it. We more than honor him-we love him. But-in all good will toward him do we say it-while we can conscieutiously applaud many of his aets of clemency, especially toward those whom the fortunes of war commpelled to commit acts, under extraordinary circumstances, that the civil law had no business to take hold of-martial law being, at the time of the commission of the acts, the paramount law of the are fully aware that our worthy Executive be the tidings that reached us from Danville attractive form.

At eight o'clock on Wednesday morning, when our informant left the town, the body was still hanging to the limb. The excuse of the men who were guilty of this lawless deed, for the crime, is, that if their victim had been tried and convicted, he would have been pardoned by the Governor.

Such an opinion is becoming far too general among the people for the public ercise his clemency as frequently and indiscriminately as of late, the Danville mol will find not only one, two, three, or a half dozen imitators, but hundreds of them. Some of the worst characters in our own eity, whom juries had convicted of high crimes, were immediately pardoacd and turned loose upon us. The people already writhe under this injustice-uot for a moment intended as injustice by the Executive, we are certain-and we would not be astonished, at any moment, to witness a mob execution in our own streets.
